Voters and Voting in the U.S.

Syllabus

Course Description

This course aims at putting the 2020 U.S. presidential election in comparative and historic perspective. Students will be introduced to central theories of voting behavior, prominent empirical analyses of U.S. politics as well as important comparative studies. The course will be divided in three parts. The first is focused on acquiring a foundational knowledge of key theories of political behavior like the sociological and spatial models of voting. The second part will make use of that knowledge in order to explain events in U.S. politics. In this main section, we will analyze prominent trends that dominate current political struggles. The final part aims at putting the U.S. experience in a broader perspective. By the end, students will be familiar with key concepts in the comparative study of political behavior as well as with an analytical understanding of U.S. politics.¹

Introductory reading:

- Evans, J. A. J. (2004). Voters and Voting: An Introduction. SAGE Publications Ltd, London; Thousand Oaks, CA
- Lewis-Beck, M. S., Norpoth, H., Jacoby, W. G., and Weisberg, H. F. (2008). The American Voter Revisited. University of Michigan Press, Ann Arbor
- Sides, J., Tesler, M., and Vavreck, L. (2018). Identity Crisis: The 2016 Presidential Campaign and the Battle for the Meaning of America. Princeton University Press, Princeton

¹Please note that the course is focused on quantitative empirical research. Having completed basic statistical training is advised. The general language of communication is English.

Requirements

Active Participation 🗨️

Active participation is the cornerstone of this course. You are expected to have read all texts carefully and to engage in a critical dialogue about these readings. Beyond understanding the central claims of each text, try to assess the validity of the argument. How is it structured? What evidence is brought forward? And how convincing do you find it?

Commenting ✍️

In preparation of each in-class session, every participant is required to post 2 comments about the assigned texts in the Moodle forum. These can be in form of open questions, dissenting criticisms or general observations. Relate to the remarks of other participants in their comments and response papers. The submissions are due by 12:00 noon on Wednesdays. You have 2 joker sessions where you can skip preparing comments.

→ together, 3 Credit Points

Response Papers 📄

During the course, you will have to prepare 2 response papers (ca. 600 words), one before the holiday break and one in the new year. These will be focused on one text of any in-class session. Here you should first briefly summarize the reading, then analyze a specific aspect that you find particularly interesting and give your own response to it. You can also reserve one paragraph for putting the reading in context of the literature from previous sessions. Please upload them as PDF. The papers are due Tuesdays by 12:00 noon so that we all get a chance to react to it.

→ 1 Credit Point

Data Sessions 📊

There will be two sessions without us meeting on Zoom. Instead, I will upload a video for each of these two dates in which I introduce you to a data set about U.S. politics. With this guidance you will then have to complete a Stata exercise. Please, help each another out and use the Moodle forum if you get stuck. Also check out the open Zoom sessions of the tutoring team at the Chair of Empirical Social Research. The assignments are due on Sunday after the respective data session.

→ 1 Credit Point

Note: Beyond commenting on our literature, I highly encourage all of you to use the Moodle forum to share your insights and additional material (as long as it is of high quality). The online format of this semester does not allow face-to-face interaction. But this does not have to mean we cannot interact with each other. Did you come across a newspaper article that fits into a recent in-class discussion or have you listened to a podcast that opens up a new perspective on a session? Or do you have questions that did not get answered in the course? Just share it and talk about it.
